A.R.P. Billet Order to be Debated

TWO deputies in the Dail—Messrs. E. M. Benson and H. M. Dockrell—have given notice to move the annulment of Emergency Powers Order No. 240. This Order empowers local authorities to appoint billeting officers.

These officers may require the occupiers of premises within the jurisdiction of a local authority to give accommodation to persons rendered homeless subsequent to attack from the air. Occupiers of premises must furnish such information as regards accommodation in their premises as a billeting officer may demand. An occupier who feels aggrieved by a billeting notice may appeal to a tribunal to be set up under the terms of the Order.

Provision is made for payment where billeting takes place at such rates and subject to such conditions as may be determined by the Minister for Local Government, but the local authority may require the person on whose behalf accommodation has been found to repay the whole or any part of such cost.

The Senate has been summoned to meet on Wednesday next to deal with the two measures which were passed by the Dail yesterday—namely, the Central Fund Bill and the Emergency Powers (Continuance) Bill.

German Bombs On London: Cinema Hit

Shortly after 5 o'clock yesterday evening about 10 German aircraft crossed the south-east coast of England, apparently making for London, says Press Association. Two bombers were destroyed. Bombs were dropped in the greater London area and at scattered points in south-east England.

Bombs fell in a residential district. A house was demolished and a man was killed. One German 'plane crashed on the borders of Caterham and Blechingley and burst into flames. The two occupants were killed.

A large cinema and an ironmonger's shop were hit when a lone raider dropped bombs in a south-east town. The casualty list is feared to be heavy. Many injured were pulled from the debris of the cinema.

At least 12 people are believed to have been killed when the cinema received a direct hit. Rescue work was still going on last night.

Four men are known to have been killed in London suburbs, while workers leaving offices and factories had narrow escapes.

Religious Facilities for Catholic Workers

Archbishop Downey, of Liverpool, who is spending a holiday with the Oblate Fathers, Piltown, Kilkenny, interviewed yesterday, praised the fine Catholic spirit, edifying conduct and splendid spirit of work of the large numbers of Irishmen in Liverpool. He also praised the action of the British Government authorities and works contractors in providing for priests and the necessary facilities for Mass for Irish workers.

No Hunger Strikers To Be Released

MR. DE VALERA: "MY LAST WORD"

THE Government are determined to continue, for the period of the emergency, the exercise of powers to intern people suspected of endangering the public safety, and will not allow their hand to be forced by the hunger-strike weapon.

This firm attitude was adopted by Ministers of State in the Dail yesterday, when the question of the internees — three of whom are on hunger-strike for 46 days—was made the principal issue in opposition to the Emergency Powers (Continuation) Bill, which was passed after two divisions.

The principal speeches were made by Mr. de Valera (left) and the Minister for Justice, Mr. Boland.

It was revealed by the Minister for Justice that in 1940 a parachutist's paraphernalia, captured in Terenure, contained plans for the invasion of this country.

"Regret of my Life"

Recalling that in November, 1939, in reply to an appeal by the Labour Party, he had stated that there were no means by which the Government could secure the safety of the people except the powers of arrest and detention of those in a position to bring the country to disaster; that the policy of the hunger-strike was aimed at taking away those means, and that once they were taken away there would be organisation to such an extent that the only way in which ultimately the supremacy of the people could be re-established was by arms, the Taoiseach said that the alternatives then facing the Government were to see men die or permit them to bring the State and the community, as a whole, to disaster. The lesser of the two evils then was not to release the men on hunger-strike, and the Government had decided not to do so.

Five or six days later, however, he had been informed that one of the men on strike was dying, and that there was no chance of his recovery, and "I foolishly urged my colleagues—I take full blame for it, because, in the event it was blameworthy—and induced them to agree to this man being transferred to a hospital. The man got well, and within a year he was engaged with others in an attack on the police, and two Gardai were killed. The two men of the party engaged in that shooting had to be executed. That was four deaths. Later we had two more—two men who had died on hunger-strike, because we had at some stage to stand absolutely firm.

FINAL WORD

"Now," continued Mr. de Valera, "it has been one of the regrets of my whole life, and will remain until my death a matter of regret, that, having made that statement in the House, I allowed any consideration of any kind to come in and get me to retract from it. If we have not got the powers of internment, restraint and prevention, we cannot govern, and we are going to have a position in this country which is going to involve us again in civil war. If anybody goes on hunger strike, we cannot let him go out—that is final. If we gave way now, we would have many more deaths, in my opinion. I have to say definitely and finally that we cannot release anybody who is on hunger strike, and those who wish to save the lives of these men, if they have any influence with them, will tell them to get off the hunger strike."

There were occasions, he said, when people felt justified in resorting to force, but that was not compatible with the duties which a Government had to undertake, and no Government could admit that right in any of its citizens. It must be admitted that if any group of citizens organised on that basis, the Government must try to stop it at the very start, otherwise there must be a clash. That was a situation which he had anticipated many years ago, and it was because of that that he had made certain speeches, which at the time, were misunderstood and misrepresented. Once there was an organised Government its duties compelled it to prevent any organisation arising which was going to use force within its territory, and he could not see any way out of that. Nobody was in prison because of his opinions, and there was nothing to prevent those people from asking the people to give them a majority in order to enable them to use force to bring back the six counties. "I think our position is clear—we cannot give way on any consideration to release these men on hunger-strike."

WAR DECLARED

Replying, at the outset, to a suggestion by Mr. R. Connolly (Lab., Louth) that he had prejudged the case of three internees by stating that he suspected them of being concerned with murder, Mr. G. BOLAND, Minister for Justice, observed that the police had published photographs of the three men wanted for the murder of Detective Sergeant O'Brien. "I said that these three men were suspected, and I said no more," said the Minister. "Unfortunately, they cannot be apprehended, but if they are caught, they will be tried."

"What kind of trial did poor O'Brien get?" interjected General SEAN McEOIN.

"I was surprised," said the MINISTER, "when the police recommended the release of these men, because I knew their records, and for the first time I objected to their recommendation. But I was persuaded that they would sign any undertaking they were asked to sign, and we now suspect that these men were responsible for the murder of Detective-Sergeant O'Brien and one of them for two other Gardai since. Every opportunity is taken to get the prisoners to change their outlook, and they have been appealed to time and again to take their places as ordinary citizens. We don't care what party they belong to, but they should not persist in trying to involve this country in war. They actually had the cheek, an unknown body of people—we don't know who they are—to make a declaration of war on the British Government, and in the name of the Irish people, too That is not denied. Seven ex-T.D.'s, elected for the last time about twenty years ago, met in Dublin and handed over their alleged powers to the I.R.A. somewhere in December of 1938, and in January the next year this body, in the name of the Irish people, declared war on Britain.

INVASION PLANS

"And what sort of war was it?" asked the Minister. "It was not a stand-up fight like in other days, but the dropping of a handbag or an attaché case, full of explosives, in a crowded thoroughfare—something that brought shame to the cheeks of Irishmen—blowing up cinemas, putting bombs in Customs huts and then running away and letting some innocent man or woman come along and be blown up. They insisted on their right to do this, and they have been carrying on this game since 1939, and if the police try to arrest them they fire on them. They have killed a great number of police and wounded many others.

"In 1940, when things were looking very bad, it became known that a parachutist had descended here. He was not captured himself, but in his paraphenalia, which was captured in Terenure, we found plans which, so far as we could see, were plans for the invasion of this country. That man took up to eighteen months to capture, and during that time he was harboured by I.R.A. people. We know that twenty-four hours after he landed at Glendalough he was taken away by these people, and it took the police eighteen months to capture him. While he was at large in this country we did not know, and nobody else knew, what to expect, and the Labour Party representatives who sat on the Defence Conference did not object to these internments.

"Another parachutist came down, but he was captured almost immediately. However, he escaped from Mountjoy and it took us three months to get him, and during those months of his freedom he was in touch with the same group of people. Is not that an indication of the wish of these people to involve this country in war—even if we leave out the attempts to wage war on Britain and the murdering of policemen and witnesses—the fact of harbouring these people who came here with plans on them to occupy this country, as far as we could see. Was not that a direct attempt to involve this country in war? This man was Chief of Staff of that organisation, as far as the police could gather, and now we are asked to assume that he is going to behave as an ordinary citizen."

Mr. O. J. FLANAGAN (M.R., Laoighis-Offaly)—The police can be wrong as well as anybody else:

Mr. BOLAND—Of course they can, and if they are every one of these men has a full opportunity of making his case, either by himself or through his deputies. I defy any deputy to say that he made representations and that I was not able to satisfy him that I was justified in holding the internees.

Mr. FLANAGAN — Will the Minister ——

Mr. BOLAND—You just hold your tongue.

Mr. FLANAGAN—I won't hold my tongue for you. The clergy in Roscommon tried to throw you out.

Mr. BOLAND—This is too serious a matter for buffoons. The whole life of this country is involved in it.

Mr. FLANAGAN—There are no buffoons here. You got the clergy in Roscommon up against you.

The SPEAKER — The term "buffoon" is scarcely one that should be used in this assembly, although the Minister has the sympathy of the Chair.

Mr. BOLAND—It is very hard to put up with this in this case, but I will withdraw the remark.

WITNESSES SHOT

Continuing, Mr. BOLAND said: "Every man's case is constantly under review. If he wishes to make any representation whatever, he will be listened to. I could not give figures of how many people have been released against the wishes of the Guards, and I have been wrong in every case, because these men will persist in their attempt to involve this country in war. Every attempt has been made to get these people to change their attitude and to do what the Labour Party and Clanna na Talmhan has done. People who, when they go for election, cannot retain their deposits claim to speak for the Irish people. They were elected twenty years ago, and have not been elected since. They think they have the right to declare war in the name of the Irish people—a right the Government has not got without coming to the Dail. This is the assembly that has the right to decide whether we will remain at peace or not.

"There are some of these men who cannot be released while the war lasts because of the terror they inspire. Because of the terror they are able to inspire we cannot try them. It is not more than two months ago since a man was shot at for giving evidence in a case. About two months before that another man was shot for giving evidence in another case. How then can we expect a trial? The only witnesses we can get now are police witnesses, except an occasional one with exceptional courage—but anyone who does that takes his life in his hands. We have two cases in Kerry where people were shot at. One was wounded and another could not get his grain or turf saved because his fields were spiked, because he gave evidence against people who took gelignite he had in his custody.

"I think it is a shame that the Labour Party has taken up the case of this hunger strike. They must know that we cannot release them and the only effect is to keep on the hunger strike in the hope that the Government will be forced to release them. It may be disastrous for the men concerned, because we cannot release them. They can be released if they change their attitude, but by hunger-striking they will not be released. It is too bad that they should be got to keep on hunger strike for an extra week because of the hope that the proceedings in this House are going to be such as to force the Government's hand."

DAIL RISES FOR THREE MONTHS

THE Dail yesterday adjourned until October 20.

The Senate will meet next week to discuss measures passed recently by the Dail.

HEAVY RAID ON COLOGNE

A BRITISH Air Ministry communiqué yesterday stated:—"Last night aircraft of Bomber Command made a heavy raid on Cologne.

"Mines were also laid in enemy waters. Fighters on intruder patrol attacked enemy airfields and railway targets in France and North-West Germany.

"Aircraft of the Fleet Air Arm, operating with Fighter Command, damaged three enemy minesweepers off the French coast.

"Eight of our bombers are missing."

According to the Press Association, Thursday night's raid was the R.A.F.'s 119th raid on Cologne, and over 1,000 tons of bombs were dropped on the city.

The German communiqué said:—"British bombers last night again made terror attacks on Cologne and surroundings. Casualties were caused among the population, and devastation to residential quarters.

ACCORDING to the Berlin Correspondent of the Stockholm "Aftonbladet," a mysterious Major, called "X," and described as an expert on commando raids, has landed in England seven times since the start of the war "in order to scout."—(Associated Press.)

"According to reports so far received, six enemy bombers were shot down."

"FIERCER AIR WAR SOON"

Sir Stafford Cripps (British Minister of Aircraft Production) last night forecast an intensification of the Allied air war "at almost any moment" when broadcasting to aircraft workers. "We have entered upon a new and more intensive phase of the air war, in which your best efforts will be more than ever necessary," he said. "We are now on the offensive, and at almost any moment there may be a great intensification of that offensive. The assault upon the Axis Powers in Europe and the Far East entails dislodging them from the occupied territories. That will be a costly task; our casualties will inevitably be heavy, but we can help to keep down those losses.

"The heavier our air attack, the less difficult will it be for our armies and navies and the lighter will be our casualties. Our objective is unconditional surrender. It is for the aircraft industry to supply the most effective means by which that may be brought about.

That there appeared to be little or no chance of building costs being reduced for years was stated by Messrs. McDonnell and Dixon, architects, Dublin, in a letter to Sligo Corporation recommending the Council to erect sixteen middle-class houses at a cost of £15,988.

Howth Herrings 2d. Each

THE largest catch of Howth herrings for 17 years slid from the trawler nets to the quayside this week, and the daily average of 1,000 to 1,300 boxes brings herrings down to 2d. and 2½d. each. Last week they were scarce at 3d. to 5d. each.

A large surplus is being exported to Great Britain at 22s. a box. At the opening of the season supplies were small, and market values reached the high level of 90s. a box.

American Troops at Outskirts of Munda

American troops pushing through the jungle of New Georgia are now fighting on the outskirts of Munda airport, said Reuter's Washington Special Correspondent, cabling last night.

The message stated that the latest reports told of bitter fighting as the spearheads of converging American forces jabbed their way into the defences of the important Japanese base.

The Japanese have made desperate attempts to land reinforcements for the garrison.

Munda faces a new threat from Allied forces which have landed on the small island of Rubiana, to the south. First news of this was given yesterday from Tokyo, which disclosed that "enemy forces which had advanced" to the island had been raided from the air.

"Allied force advanced headuarters, 10th July. Allied forces, under command of General Eisenhower began landing operations on Sicily early this morning.

"The landings were preceded by Allied air attack. Allied naval forces escorted the assault forces and bombarded the coast defenecs during the assault."

The U.S. War Dept. states that General Eisenhower broadcast to the people of France that the invasion of Sicily is "The first stage in the liberation of the European Continent," stated a Reuter message from Washington.

Frenchmen of Metropolitan France were told from Allied Force H.Q., North Africa, and Allied radio stations this morning:—

"Announcement to Frenchmen of Metropolitan France: The United Nations' armed forces have today launched an offensive against Sicily.

"It is the first stage in the liberation of the European Continent. There will be others. I call on the French people to remain calm, not to allow themselves to be deceived by the false rumours which the enemy might circulate. Verify carefully the news you receive.

"By remaining calm and by not exposing yourselves to reprisals through premature action you will be helping us effectively. When the hour of action strikes we will let you know."

"Till then help us by by following our instructions. That is to say—keep calm, conserve your strength. We repeat—when the hour of action strikes we will let you know."

GERMAN WEDGES ESTABLISHED AT GREAT COST

"TIGER"-LED tank columns yesterday kept up the offensive battering at the Byelgorod end of the Kursk salient on the Russian front, where German wedges were driven in at a terrific cost, an A.P. special correspondent cables from Moscow. Little is yet known in Moscow of this fresh onslaught, except that it is growing in violence.

The southern flank at Kursk is not yet in any serious danger, but much depends on who wins the third round in the next twenty-four hours, Reuter reports.

MAIN THRUST

The danger area is not disclosed, but it is believed that the main German thrust is against the Byelgorod-Kursk main railway line.

GERMANS USE TANK-BUSTER

GERMAN tank formations have been given a sister weapon in the air—the Tankbuster 'plane. Equipped with special anti-tank guns, they played an important part in Thursday's battle, it is claimed in Berlin.—(Reuter.)

There are more German tanks concentrated on this small sector than along the entire coast of France, a late message last night stated.

NO BIG SUCCESS

The fact that the 120 miles stretch of main line between the two German strongholds of Orel and Byelgorod has been in Russian hands since the winter has been a thorn in the German side for many months. It is claimed that Marshal von Kluge has not gained any big operational success yet, but Soviet military circles emphasise that German pressure is expected to increase, and much heavy fighting is still ahead.

The Military Correspondent of the German News Agency said last night that thousands of tanks are facing each other or are manœuvring against each other, and that the air is filled with the roar of these field monsters. The statement continues:—"The greatest tank battle, greatest air activity and intense artillery bombardment combine to make this the most violent battle of machines of this war. The Russians have concentrated extraordinarily strong forces of artillery and salvo guns in the two focal points. German artillery has been brought up in this narrow sector on a scale never before witnessed on the eastern front, and the most violent artillery duel of the war has now developed. Another 522 tanks and 238 guns have been destroyed or captured, bringing the total to over 1,100 tanks, as well as 974 'planes.

"In the Byelgorod sector a unit of the Waffen S.S. crossed the Donetz, enlarged its new positions, and held them against furious counter-attacks," according to the German News Agency.

"The German Command has successfully widened the break-through in the Soviet defences in depth and has cleaned up the remaining nests of resistance. The Red Army line is falling back before the attacks of German infantry."

Another report claims that a wave of tanks overran the Soviet defence system east of Byelgorod and widened the German wedge eastwards towards Novooskol, on the River Oskol, about 50 miles east of Byelgorod. It is also claimed that south of Orel German troops have advanced many miles.

Russian forces, including some cavalry units, are being thrown in against the German flanks, according to the Berlin Correspondent of the Swedish Press, who states that the manœuvrability and firing power of the new types of German tank are particularly striking. "They are even more powerful than the 'Tiger' tank," he says. "The range of its guns is greater than that of any other tank on either side." The same message states that the air front too has shifted to the East.

Last night's Soviet communiqué stated: "During July 9 our troops in the Orel-Kursk and Byelgorod directions continued to engage the enemy, who continued his offensive with large tank and infantry forces. Throughout the day our air forces fought fierce battles with the enemy air force."

Depressed Dublin Man Jailed

When, at Clane District Court yesterday, John Lawlor, with an address at 9 Mill lane, Dublin, was sentenced to three months, with hard labour, for stealing a bicycle, evidence was given by Garda Burke that he found the accused man in his cell the previous day with a scarf around his neck and he was trying to hang himself.

Lawlor said he had trouble with his wife and that, as a result, he was depressed.

Emergency Powers: Dail Debate

DEFENDING the censorship against allegations by the Labour Party of partiality towards Fianna Fail in the election, Mr. F. AIKEN, Minister for the Co-Ordination of Defensive Measures, said in the Dail yesterday that he did not believe that Fianna Fail was the sole bulwark of neutrality, and they could not have sustained neutrality without the unity of all parties. "One of the things that has enabled us to get what supplies we can through the troubled waters of the Atlantic is that both belligerents recognise that we are honourably neutral, and nobody who tries to give the impression that we are not playing the game—that while, in fact, we are pretending to bring in supplies, we are scouts for one or other of the belligerents—is doing a bad day's work for this country.

"I hope," said the Minister, "that Mr. Norton will take the opportunity later of condemning the hand that wrote the advertisement on June 22nd, and which condemned the criminal policy of the Government in sending brave men to their deaths in the Irish Oak. The Labour Party will admit that the Irish Oak, no matter by whom it was manned, behaved in a strictly neutral way when she was sunk by a belligerent submarine, and that that submarine had no right in international or moral law to sink her."

Mr. NORTON—Hear, hear. It was a criminal and cowardly act.

"I hope," said the Minister, "that Deputy Norton will take steps to deny that the Irish Government did anything that could give justification to that criminal submarine."

Mr. Aiken added that he did not believe in the I.R.A. attitude of making war on the British forces at the moment. "We have developed our policy of trying to get a peaceful settlement of these difficulties, and we do not believe that the reunity of our country is going to be helped by involvement in this war or by attacking the British forces in the six counties, or elsewhere, during the course of this war. I have no enmity against these men in the Curragh: all I am sorry for is that they are not fighting for a better cause."

The attitude taken by Mr. W. T. COSGRAVE (F.G., Cork), who opened the debate, was that in so far as the general principle of taking powers, such as were contained in the Act, in the interests of the nation were concerned, Fine Gael were in agreement with whatever Government was in power in this or any other country during a time of crisis. While agreeing with that principle, Mr. COSGRAVE disagreed strongly with the manner in which the powers, freely granted, had been abused, holding that many of the Orders, made in what he described as "mass production legislation," should have been brought into the House and discussed there. Taking the example of the Wages Standstill Order, he contended that had it been brought before the assembly something in the nature of what had been adopted in Northern Ireland and Great Britain would have been proposed.

It was unjust, with the cost of living rising as it was, to say that "this vicious spiral cannot be allowed." The House would be entitled to insist on stabilisation of prices concurrent with a wages standstill. "We cannot understand why it is," he said; "that in Great Britain successful attempts could be made to keep down the cost of living to a 20 per cent. increase compared with 50 per cent. here." Mr. Cosgrave protested strongly against the use of powers to inflict penalties on business people after they had been punished by the courts.

"ROBBER BANKS"

Outright opposition to the Emergency Powers Act was expressed by Mr. O. FLANAGAN (M.R., Leix-Offaly), who said that all such measures were directed against Republicanism. Why, he asked, did they not have such Acts against the Jews, who crucified Christ 19 centuries ago, and were crucifying the people of this country every day; against the Masons, who surely were as illegal as the I.R.A.; or against the robber banks? "I am," he said, "demanding the release of these men in the Curragh Camp on behalf of the people, who sent me here as a Republican." He was surprised, he added, to see Deputy Dillon still free, because, if others made Deputy Dillon's statements, they would be in jail long ago.

Speaking of penalties imposed on traders, Mr. S. LEMASS, Minister for Supplies, stressed that failure to keep records or the keeping of inaccurate records was not a trivial offence. The keeping of these records was an essential part of the rationing system.

He pointed out that offences against rationing or price controlling orders in Italy were dealt with by the closing of the premises in question and the imprisonment of the owner. In Germany the penalty was death.

"MENACE TO PEACE"

A telegram from Sean McCool, one of the striking internees, in which he denied that he wanted to involve the country in war, was read by Mr. W. NORTON (Lab., Kildare). The message concluded: "British and American occupation of our six Northern counties, and Britain's enforced partition of Irish territory and her denial of a full sovereign constitution, is the only real menace to Irish peace and neutrality in the present world struggle."

In the division on the second stage, challenged by Labour, and carried by the Government by 81 votes to 23, Fine Gael and six farmers—Messrs. Blowick, Cafferky, Cogan, Mahony, Sheldon, and O'Reilly, P.—voted with the Government, while Deputies Beirne, Burke, Donnellan, Finucane and Meighan, of the Farmers' Party, and two Independents—Messrs. A. Byrne, jun., and O. J. Flanagan (M.R.)—went into the Opposition lobby with Labour.

Urging that business interests should be consulted in regard to regulations and journalists brought into consultation concerning censorship, Mr. COSGRAVE sought on the Committee stage to reduce the life of the bill to April next, but this was defeated by 62 votes to 36.

Gold Magnate's Death Mystery

The Nassau (Bahamas) police have announced that they are hopeful shortly of clearing up the circumstances of the death of Sir Harry Oakes, gold magnate and wealthy politician, according to a New York despatch last night. Injuries on the body, which was found at Sir Harry's Nassau home yesterday, led to an investigation behind closed doors, and fears of foul play arose from the arrival from Miami, Florida, of two U.S. police experts to aid the local constabulary.

Lady Oakes said at Bar Harbour, Maine, that she understood her husband was playing tennis, and she had presumed that death was due to heart failure. After formal evidence, yesterday's inquest was adjourned.—(P.A. and Reuter.)

The Attorney-General of the Bahamas has disclosed that Sir Harry Oakes was found dead on a bed which had been set on fire. He said there were four severe head wounds and burns on the body.—(P.A. and Reuter.)

THE POWERSCOURT FILM

The 800 Irish "warriors" who are fighting the battle of Agincourt on the green hills of the Powerscourt Demesne will be seen but not heard in the film version of Shakespeare's "Henry V.," which is in production there. Incidental music, specially composed by William Walton, leading modern British composer, which is to take the place of the usual battle sounds, will be added to the silent sequences later.

The hardest working man in the demesne is Laurence Olivier, taking the business of directing his first film very seriously. First on the lot in the mornings, last to leave at night, he lives in a caravan on the site, eats the same food as the extras, rises with them about 5.30. He finds the Irish extras hard-working and eager to please.

The film people find the Irish climate hard to understand. Bleak, misty showers, which in England would mean packing up for the week, pass in a matter of minutes. Rain holds up work, as brilliant sunshine is needed for technicolour filming, but a couple of minutes' celluloid is considered a good day's work.

A triumph of smooth organisation is the camp, a town in miniature, with living quarters, restaurants, factories, a doctor's, a barber's, offices, a postbox, and even provision for visitors. Most interesting of all are the constructional details of the camp. Making good their promise that everything will be left exactly as it was found, the Two Cities Film Company is using nothing that cannot be used again. Neither wood nor nails have been used in the camp; sectional, semi-permanent structures of corrugated asbestos or concrete blocks take the place of wooden huts. The asbestos sheeting and the concrete blocks, bought in Ireland, will be re-sold for use here, and everything else bought in Ireland will remain in the country. The last act of the filming of "Henry V.," as far as Ireland is concerned, will be an auction of the miscellaneous relics of the film production outfit.

Dublin Girl who Vanished

On Sunday afternoon of March 22, 1936, Miss Mary Pierce, who lived with her parents at 76 Lower Dorset street, Dublin, left home for a walk and never returned. In the words of counsel, who told the story to Mr. Justice Overend in the High Court yesterday, she vanished that Sunday and never had been heard of from that day to this.

At the time of her disappearance she was twenty-nine years of age, and had been carrying on a children's private school for eleven years. She was of a very quiet disposition, had no attachments, did not dance, and seldom went to a picture house, except an odd time with her father.

She had £160 in the bank, and it still remained untouched, and all her clothes and personal effects remained in the house.

These statements were contained in an affidavit of the girl's mother, Mrs. Bridget Pierce, on whose behalf Mr. W. L. Sainsbury (instructed by Messrs. Gerald Byrne and Co.) applied for leave to depose to death on information and belief, and to apply for letters of administration to her estate.

Mr. Justice Overend gave the permission asked for.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Practice and Theory

By Patrick Trench

The Clifton Park System of Farming. By Robert H. Elliot. Faber and Faber. 12/6 net.

THIS reprint of the classical work on tea farming, first published in 1898, comes at the right time. It will be found essential by those who want to see a sound reconstruction of our overworked farmlands after the war. An introduction by Sir George R. Stapledon, Director of the Imperial Bureau of Pasture and Forage Plants, and leading authority on the improvement of our most valuable crop, brings the book into focus for present day readers. It is described on the title page as "A Guide for Landlords, Tenants, and Land-Legislators," and under the last heading Elliot draws political conclusions far too favourable to the landlord class to which he belonged. His criticism of the Irish Land Acts will be particularly unpopular in this country. This cannot reduce our appreciation of his pioneer work, which founded a school of practical research now bearing fruit at such centres as the Welsh Plant Breeding Station and upon thousands of fertile farms.

Elliot started farming as a coffee planter in Mysore, where he observed that far better crops could be raised from fresh jungle soil than from cropped land of about the same chemical composition. He concluded that the most important agent of fertility was not to be found in chemical manures, but in the physical texture of soil well supplied with decaying vegetation, thus running counter to the chemical farming notions based on Liebig's discoveries, which were then at the height of their popularity. When Elliot came to farm his own estate at Clifton on Bowmont in Scotland, he put his theories to the test. A big landowner, he elected to rent out the best of his farms, and himself work the poorest, "because the landlord should show by his example what can be done under the worst conditions."

"Taking the Plough Round"

Elliot's argument was that when, for example, land required nitrogen, the farmer had better grow clover, which will fix it from the atmosphere, and, at the same time, provide fodder for animals and a rich sward to plough in as manure for subsequent crops, rather than buy it in the form of an artificial fertiliser. He put his land under grass and clover for four years, after which two crops of turnips and two of corn were grown from its accumulated fertility, a small dressing of artificials being given to the turnips only. The land was then put back to grass for another four years. He found that the fertility of some of the poorest land in Scotland was so built up, after a few such rotations, that paying crops of roots and potatoes could be grown without any manure whatever. His main thesis is supported by the most advanced agricultural practice of to-day, which places the emphasis less and less on chemistry, and on permanent arable and permanent grass, and more and more on the value of humus created by "taking the plough around the farm."

On important points of detail, however, Elliot laid down a challenge to grassland science which has never been taken up. He condemned as worthless the universally-used ryegrass, and preferred the stronger rooting cocksfoot—generally considered a coarse plant, but giving fine hay and sward under his skilful management. Theorists still hold strong and diverse views on this controversy, which has not yet been finally settled. Apart from cocksfoot, Elliot used a most unusual assemblage of plants to form pasture, and his claims for them demand critical study, which they have not yet received. The plough, he believed, does not go deep enough. It forms a pan almost like soft rock just below ploughing depth. Subsoiling devices are too expensive on poor land. The pan must be broken up and moisture and mineral salts pumped up from below by long-rooted plants such as chicory, which will penetrate four feet through hard soil. He found it worth while to employ a special system of management to get over the difficulty of making chicory into hay. "The cheapest, deepest and best tillers, drainers and warmers of soil are roots." That is but one of the far-reaching claims he makes, which might revolutionise farming practice if substantiated, but about which no one can express a definite opinion because the research work which would settle the question has not been done. This is admitted by Sir George Stapledon, but his determination that it shall be done in the near future is to be read between the lines of his introduction. In the meantime, Elliot's book should be read not as an "authority," but as a stimulating philosophy of farming.

Agricultural Planning

The lea farming system, fathered by Elliot, is rapidly gaining ground in England, and it is with the latest refinements of that system that Irish agriculture will have to compete after the war. An authoritative survey of its development has been published by Sir George Stapledon and William Davies, who, as Assistant Director of the Grassland Improvement Station, works under him. It is a Penguin Special, with semi-official endorsement in the form of a foreword by the Ministry of Agriculture. The paper cover is hardly strong enough for a reference book of such permanent importance. My copy is already far gone from use, and it is to be hoped that members of our Agricultural Planning Committee possess copies in a similar state; for Irish agriculture after the war will depend for its success largely upon our ability to rebuild the soil run down by too many grain crops, and there is no other way but by the intelligent use of lea.

To too many of us grass is just grass. These warm week-ends Dublin cyclists are a common sight in the surrounding country, stretched out on full-grown meadow, innocent of any thought that they are damaging meat and milk. Even the farmer may fail to distinguish between wild and cultivated grasses, or at least between inferior and valuable varieties, and few could prescribe a seed mixture to suit a particular field. The chapter on species and strains of herbage plans in "Lea Farming" should be read as a stimulus to further knowledge. More good reading along the same lines will be found in "Soil and Sense," by Michael Graham, and "Back to Better Grass," by I. G. Lewis, both published by Faber and Faber.

A Penny in the Clouds

By Austin Clarke

"YOU never saw so many people in your life. They come from all parts of the country, far and wide, to make the pilgrimage," said the old man, who pointed out to me the track along the slope of Croagh Patrick. He spoke so eloquently about the great annual pilgrimage to the Reek, that it was with difficulty I ventured at last to glance at my watch and leave him. But his words had cast a lingering spell over my mind, and, as I hurried up the green furzy slopes and scrambled along the short-cuts, my solitary mood was disturbed. I seemed to hear the shrill whistle of excursion trains coming into Westport, the grinding of motor brakes down at Murrisk, the jingle of harness, the faint whirr of innumerable bicycle wheels. But as I stared at the long, distant ridge of Croagh Patrick I forgot the reverential crowds who climbed there on one Sunday in the year. A small misty cloud hid the upper part of the mountain, but it disappeared in a few minutes, and I saw the chapel on the summit, outlined like a tiny square cairn, against the sky.

Suddenly, as I came over a few tumbled rocks, there stretched before me the narrow track of black shale. Ridge beyond ridge, that clear, steep track rose before me, and there was something very familiar about it to me. I realised that it was, indeed, the straight and narrow path known to us all from age-old allegory and homily. I was glad that I was making the pilgrimage alone, and not scrambling up the loose shale among the murmurs of a multitude of pilgrims. Looking down, I could see the little promontory at Murrisk, with its sparse, ancient trees and its ruined abbey. Island beyond island, the narrow runs of Clew Bay glittered in the morning sunlight as I climbed higher. The legendary reach of ocean below me in the west brought back to my mind the traditional stories of Granuaile. She had rebelled not only against the insolent rule of the stranger, but against the laws of matrimony. She had taken to the sail and roamed the liberal seas with strong men.

Distractions

Realising that such thoughts should not be entertained by a pilgrim, I determined not to look down at Clew Bay any more, and so I cast my eyes modestly on the ground. Scarcely had I done so when I found myself staring at a small and unexpected object. It was a dainty wooden heel wrenched from a girl's shoe. What pretty foot from Dublin had been supported by that little object before me? I thought of the young girl pilgrim hobbling up the track on one heel, her vanity completely chastened. My thoughts were becoming distracted again, and I hastened on. But to my astonishment, I found that the way was strewn with shoe-heels. Can no exhortations prevent women from raising their stature a couple of inches in order to reach men's hearts? It seemed as if the very ground itself had protested and wrenched away these objects of folly.

In order to escape from my own indignation, I looked determinedly at the rocks on each side of the track. My astonishment was increased even more when I noticed that here and there, hidden discreetly in chink or lying in the open, with rackish necks, was a great number of bottles. As I struggled along, those abandoned bottles began to afflict me with a thirst which was as great as my curiosity about them. Were bona fide travellers, overcome by sudden remorse, accustomed to struggle up to the slope of the historic mountain and collapse among its rocks? Suddenly a satisfactory explanation of the mystery flashed into my mind. The travellers in Dunsany's play, The Glittering Gate, are tantalised on their journey to heaven in a very effective way. Innumerable bottles descend within hand's reach through the abysm, but when the travellers grasp them all prove to be empty. Had some zealous and practical soul-saver placed those empty beer bottles there in order to make the straight and narrow way more arduous for the male pilgrims?

Amid these distractions and temptations of thought I scarcely knew that the sunlight was gone until I noticed the shale gleaming wetly at my feet. A fine drizzle was racing down towards the hollows from which I had come, racing so lightly, so delicately, I knew that I was walking through a cloud. In the chill twilight of that cloud sound had become strange as if it were trying to hush itself. The loose stones and gravel no longer clinked and rattled from my boots. They fell down with a mournful and solemn sound. In the loneliness of that cloud I became aware at last of remote centuries. It may have been along this traditional track that St. Patrick had climbed to the mountain top in order to begin his great fast. I could only see a few yards ahead of me into the deepening gloom. The rapid mist, so fine that it scarcely wet my shoulders, sped downwards. But when I looked back, the glimmering shale ended abruptly in a swirling gloom.

The Summit

I came at last to a great jutting rock. Far below that sudden cliff might be the Hollow of the Demons. This might be the very spot where Patrick had wrestled with the powers of darkness. Tireachan tells us that the demons and evil spirits first came in the form of enormous black birds. But the great bell-ringer drove them back with a clapper. They returned again in greater numbers, running on the air in half human, half bestial shape to confound their antagonist. I crept cautiously towards the cliff—

> But as I stumbled to the flint
> Where blessed Patric drove a crowd
> Of fiends that roared like cattle-men,
> Until they stamped themselves out
> Between the fiery pens, I felt
> Repentance gushing from the rock.

Spiritually fortified, overcoming the ache of mortal muscle, I struggled on through the glimmer and gloom, knowing that I must now be near the top of the mountain. The mist had become thicker, the track was steeper, and, as I stopped anxiously for a moment, I thought I heard the first mutterings of storm. But I was determined to reach the peak. The track turned and came to an end and I groped bewildered across finer gravel and turf. Peering through the mist, I saw at last the plain concreted wall of the small church. Stone by stone, the material for that holy edifice had been carried up the mountain track.

I groped around the walls until I came to the simple door. It was locked, but there was an inscription painted on it. Greatly moved, I stumbled forward across loose stones. What words, the highest in Ireland, would I find here, inscribed in the clouds, for the edification and spiritual refreshment of the solitary pilgrim? Here on this desolate peak, where our national saint fasted for forty days and nights in wind, rain and tempest, I read in large, white-painted letters the one word: "Offerings." Under that legendary word was a slot in the locked door. Fumbling in my pocket, I drew out the poet's mite—a penny. But scarcely had I dropped it into the money box when I leaped back in alarm. For suddenly, as if that small coin had magnified itself a hundred times and had awakened as many echoes, it clattered and reverberated through the empty church. But the reverberations did not cease—they seemed to rumble and spread through the misty darkness around me. Terrified by the prodigious consequences of my action, I fled down the mountain track, and it was not until I came to the cliff above the Hollow of the Demons that I realised a thunderstorm had broken around the mountain's top.

SPRING NOW COMES

By Peter Wells.

SPRING now comes twisting the fabric of hands
Like a loom to wander in a Flemish parlour
With cards and diamonds red in your white choir
Of voices lapping the shores of my desire.

O spring now comes, entering the hollow alley,
Where the roar of planes prohibits the necessary truce
So that my trysts with you are given another, secondary use
And bombs like cigarettes smoke your white day.

Spring comes, yet like the packets of white birds
That I have offered you, or the blunt wing
Skeining the sky with bullets of revenge,
Your image falters and I die before the hand can plunge

Into this other spring, the sweet, quiet coming home
Carrying oranges to you and the voluptuous bloom
Of all the flowers that flame where you have walked
And the sharp scent of love snatched from your name.

John O'Leary

MR. NIALL O'LEARY CURTIS writes:—

SIR,—I think I can refresh Seamus O'Sullivan's memory on the subject of the library of my godfather, John O'Leary.

I remember hearing from my father that the library was bequeathed to the National Literary Society of Ireland. The Society was not in a position to house the books for many years up to the time that it went out of existence, and I understood that they were stored on the premises of Messrs. Browne and Nolan, but I am not sure of this, as it must be some twenty-five years since I heard the matter mentioned.

Perhaps the books are still there. There may be some surviving members of the "National Lit." who could shed light on the subject, or Messrs. Browne and Nolan might help.

The Land of "She"

The Realm of a Rain-Queen. By E. Jenson Krige and J. D. Krige. Oxford University Press. 21/- net.

THIS book presents the life and culture of the Lovedu, a Bantu tribe in South Africa. Its central figure is their sacred Queen Mujaji, the Rain-maker (Rider Haggard's "She"). The authors, whose first contact with the Lovedu took place more than ten years ago, are trained anthropologists, and have brought together many interesting facts concerning the culture of the Lovedu. They show the nature of its parts and their relation to one another. With one or two exceptions, every custom and every ceremony described has been seen personally, and the book is a faithful and valuable record of every-day things as they are enacted in the tribe.

Graham Greene Again

The Ministry of Fear. By Graham Greene. Heinemann. 8/6 net.

MR. GRAHAM GREENE is a writer whose life-work has been the employment of a "popular" art-form for "serious" ends. His method is to use the framework of the modern adventure story of crime or espionage or both, and to fill such a framework with motives and characters more akin to those of the "highbrow" novel. He is less inclined to analyse them himself, than to let their implications appear in action. Occasionally, as in "Stamboul Train," one gets the feeling that the exigencies of plot have caused him to drop all his purposes and concentrate on rounding it off. But in general, and in this latest book, it is remarkable how little the convention intrudes.

We may presume that Mr. Greene is not altogether happy about the feasibility of his attempt; for he himself has divided his fictional works into "novels" and "entertainments." This division does not always coincide with that between his successes and his comparative failures. "A Gun For Sale," which is an "entertainment," seems to have more cohesion than "It's a Battlefield," which is a "novel." It is, perhaps, too much to ask cohesion in the serious presentation of a state of things essentially incoherent.

The "entertainments," of which "The Ministry of Fear" is one, are less concerned to give a complete picture. More often than not, the central character is in some way maimed or defective. The novelist is thus relieved of the task of pointing the contrast between the mis-shapen and the harmonious or potentially harmonious. In this case, the hero, Arthur Rowe, has been an inmate of a criminal lunatic institution, and in the course of the book he loses his memory and again comes under treatment. Some (but not all) of the apparently normal characters turn out in the end to be villians and, therefore, also victims.

But the emphasis is all on Rowe himself, the misfit, in whom a virtue has operated to a logical but unsocial extent, the man who has earlier been declared insane. It is clear that the virtue of pity, concentrated in him, would be more effective if it were wider (and, therefore, thinner) spread. As it is, the villiain who is quite without pity does not receive enough attention to make the final disclosure of his rôle quite credible. Mr. Greene knows quite well that the adventure novel can only be written with counters, not with characters. Here he writes one which obeys all the rules, except that one character who is not a counter, and is yet too odd to be representative, has strayed into the book and inevitably taken the central place. As a study of morbid psychology, it lacks finality; but it succeeds as criticism of the normal, by the use of a pregnant principle of contrast. It will hardly rank among its author's key-books, nor is it an example for a beginner in Graham Greene to start on. But it will be read by his admirers, and it will give them something new.

A Plan for Medicine

Health for All. By D. Stark Murray, M.B. Gollancz. 6/- net.

POST-WAR planning is a fashionable subject at the moment: Dr. Murray discusses the defects of pre-war and present medical services in Great Britain, and explains how these might be improved under a socialized medical service.

The hospital services are chaotically organised under the dual system of voluntary and municipal control; the mining and heavy industry areas — districts where illness is likely to be most prevalent—have fewer doctors than the healthier residential areas; the panel doctor's efficiency is impaired by lack of leisure and by lack of opportunity for refresher courses. How can health be protected while the housing conditions in the large cities are terrible, while large numbers of the population receive inadequate nourishment, while rehabilitation schemes for the sick and injured are inadequate, while proper health propaganda is lacking?

Such and much more Dr. Murray has to say about health and medicine. But he is not merely a destructive critic; he has his remedies ready. He looks forward to seeing well-equipped and well-staffed hospitals. It is interesting to note that he considers that the ideal hospital should have 800-1,200 beds, and should be situated in the city, not outside it. He wants to see pharmaceutical chemists refusing to sell cosmetics, patent medicines, hot water bottles and photographic materials. He thinks that the sale of patent medicines, pushed by untrue and exaggerated claims, should be prohibited.

Dr. Murray writes as an enthusiast, and, though one may disagree with some of his criticisms and with some of his proposed remedies, his book is well worth reading—at least for that small section of the laity who really have an interest in the progress of health protection and medical organisation.

A New Church History

A History of the Catholic Church. By Rev. John F. O'Doherty, D.D., Ph.D. The National Press, Dublin. 3/9 net.

INTO this manual of almost three hundred pages the writer has compressed an extensive store of information, making it well adapted for the purpose in view. He has shown a judicious sense of proportion in the space assigned to each period of Church history, and described its outstanding events with comprehensive brevity. Executed on such lines, it will be found serviceable for Catholic pupils in advanced grades in national schools and in secondary schools and colleges.

Commending it, the Most Rev. Dr. Farren, Bishop of Derry, writes: "Above all, Dr. O'Doherty's History is of particular interest to Irish readers for the scientific study of the story of the Church in our own country. Although the very nature of his work demands brevity, the author has contrived to include an amount of detail more than sufficient for the average student. Clear-cut order is the keynote of this exposition of Irish history."

First Light. By Eve Orme. Rich and Cowan. 8/6 net.

A curiously sad tale with an ending that is, at least, optimistic, is this book. It concerns a girl who eventually falls in love with the brother of a man to whom she has had a liaison. At last, when first married, they agree their marriage is to be one of convenience, she to produce an heir, he just to be the "mere male." The story deals with her former lover, who is something of a cad, the revealing of her earlier liaison, and the means through which her husband becomes reconciled. The characters convince and the book is a readable one. The unsavoury theme is well handled.

Middle-Aged Tired Feeling

Is probably due to Acid Stomach

Nearly all men, and women too, at about the age of 40 begin to suffer more or less with acidity which gives rise to the varied symptoms of dyspepsia. Food causes flatulence and possibly pain. You lose tone and suffer from physical and mental weariness which shakes your self-confidence.

Dismiss the thought and banish the trouble by taking 'Milk of Magnesia' to sweeten your sour stomach.

The effect of 'Milk of Magnesia' in neutralizing acidity is marvellous. With good digestion regained, most of the "pep" you think you've lost will quickly return. Get either the liquid preparation or the remarkable new 'Milk of Magnesia' brand Tablets.

Obtainable everywhere.

'Milk of Magnesia,' 1/3 and 2/6. Also 'Milk of Magnesia' Tablets, 6d., 1/-, 2/- and 3/6.

Hunger Strikes

Dail Eireann rose yesterday until October, having devoted much of its time during the present week to the discussion of a theme that is only too familiar to the people of this country—namely, the hunger strike. For the last three years some four hundred persons have been interned. They have been kept in custody without trial, and the Minister for Justice has assured the Dail more than once that their continued detention is in the best interests of the State. About six weeks ago three of these young men decided to go on hunger strike. They were offered their freedom on certain terms—if they should undertake to obey the law of the land and fulfil the ordinary duties of citizenship; but they refused to accept any stipulations, insisting on their right to unconditional release. Mr. Boland, on Wednesday, and Mr. de Valera yesterday, told Dail Eireann that the Government had decided not to give way, and that this time its decision was final. If the three misguided young men in the Curragh persist in their determination to defy the Government, they presumably will die, and the responsibility for their deaths will lie, not with the Government, but, in the first instance, with themselves, and afterwards with those under whose orders they seem to be acting. In the interests of common humanity, may we appeal to those who have either authority or influence over the young men on hunger strike to call off this hopeless challenge to lawful authority? There is no other way of escape from a situation that never ought to have been created; and, now that the Taoiseach and his Minister for Justice have made it clear that they will not give way, the only humane and intelligent course is to abandon a struggle that otherwise must end in stark tragedy. The weapon of the hunger strike always was unfair; it is doubly unfair now that the Irish people have their own Government. By its very nature it appeals to the kindliness of our people in defiance of the law; and it is only fair to those unhappy youths who are starving themselves to death in the Curragh to say that few members either of the present Government or of the official Opposition are wholly free from blame. The weapon of the hunger strike was used successfully not only against the British, but also against the Free State Government, and now, in the middle of a world war, it is being used against the Government of Fianna Fail.

Let us say at once that we have no kind of sympathy either with the hunger strikers or with the cause which they represent. Mr. Boland's statement of the Government's case was entirely convincing, all the more so because it was stated with admirable moderation. The individuals who have been interned without trial have not been taken into custody wilfully or through mere caprice. Mr. Boland, who has information at his disposal that cannot be vouchsafed to the ordinary citizen, assured Dail Eireann that these persons were anxious to involve Ireland in the war. He declared that documents discovered among the belongings of a parachutist who had been dropped on Irish soil and had been harboured by members of the organisation to which the internees give allegiance, suggested that a foreign invasion of this country was in contemplation. He also declared that on previous occasions, when hunger-strikers and others had been released, acts of violence, involving human life, had been the result. We realise that many of the young men who have taken up arms against the lawfully constituted authority of the Irish State are sincere idealists, and are single-minded in their purpose. We also realise that they are following an unfortunate example that was set to them by their elders in times that are gone. Nevertheless, they are wrong—tragically and fatally wrong. They cannot be allowed to hold the Government and the people of the new Ireland up to ransom, even if, in the final analysis, their own lives should be forfeit. As Mr. Boland declared in the Dail, no man who believes that he has been interned wrongfully will be refused a proper hearing. If the men who are on hunger strike are prepared to submit themselves as law-abiding citizens, to the authority of the State, they can obtain their freedom immediately; but, unhappily, they insist that their release must be unconditional—in short, they are arrogating to themselves the right to overrule the State. Their lives are in their own hands, and in those of the men who are associated with them. In common with the vast majority of our people, we grieve to think that Irish lives should be sacrificed needlessly on the altar of a senseless ideal. We plead with all who may be concerned to save the lives of these young men. No good purpose can be served by their sacrifice; and their undoubted moral and physical courage, directed into lawful channels, yet might be of valuable service to the nation.

"Twelfth" Week

Next Monday is the Twelfth of July, but already the signs suggest that few people will be left to "play on the flute to the sound of the drum" at the great Orange festival. Throughout the last week holiday-makers from all over the Six Counties have been streaming southwards, and this week-end the stream will become a torrent. The "Twalth Week" is the great holiday season for the North: Factories and mills close down, shops and offices with them, and the year's savings are brought out of the Post Office to be squandered on one glorious week of merry-making. Nowadays, as the Lancashire "Wakes" bring a boom to Blackpool, the week of the Twelfth gives Dublin the air and the prosperity of a holiday resort. Many of the workers who head south for their holidays have no desire to "see Ireland first"—or, indeed, at all. They want bright lights and ice cream, cheap drinks and beefsteaks, butter and bacon and eggs—in short, high living and gaiety. For, and through, them Dublin is Ireland's biggest holiday centre, and Dun Laoghaire and Bray are its suburbs. It is a pity, perhaps, that, under present conditions, many of the finest parts of Ireland are inaccessible to those who have only a week's holiday. Donegal, of course, is reached comparatively easily from any point across the Border, and thousands of visitors will go to seek—not in vain—the beauties of its mountains and its coast. Some of the hardier spirits may cycle as far as Galway, and "do" Connemara inside the week; but that will be beyond the powers of many and the desire of most. In general, the "one-week-only" tourist will be unable to penetrate as far as Connemara, or to dive down south to Killarney, Parknasilla, and Glengariff. It is a pity; because few, in comparison with the total number of holiday-makers, will have an opportunity of getting beneath the surface of this State. Dublin is a great, an interesting, but a separate entity; it is something quite distinct from Ireland, though a part of it; and in this sense Dun Laoghaire and Bray are, in fact, mere suburbs. Nevertheless, the opportunity now offered of extending "hands across the border" is unique. Throughout the summer, but especially for the next week, it will be the responsibility of Dublin to act as host on behalf of Eire; it will be the task and the privilege of the Dubliner to show, by his hospitality, that whatever the differences of governments and politicians, the Northerner and the Southerner are still kinsmen. The strength of that relationship was demonstrated in its most striking form on the occasion of Belfast's "Blitz." This summer there is an opportunity to prove it further—less dramatically, perhaps, but none the less surely. We have never believed that the border could be abolished by flags and slogans; we abhor the notion that any attempt should be made to abolish it by force; but we are confident that it can be abolished eventually by tact, goodwill and common sense. If the Dubliner uses those virtues—they are not the least of virtues—in his dealings with the visitors, it will be a big step in the right direction. At least, he will have the satisfaction of knowing that he has helped to make a pleasant holiday for a weary worker; at most, he may be taking a practical step towards national unity.

SMYTH AND DAVIS IN FINAL OF LUMSDEN GOLF CUP

By J. P. ROONEY.

IF B. F. Smyth and G. Davis, in to-day's final for the John Lumsden Memorial Cup at the Castle, reproduce the golf they played last evening, it should be an exceptionally fine match. Each won by substantial margins, but the Smyth-Fund Commin and D. J. Murphy—also played excellently. Against Mullan Smyth was at the top of his form. His driving was powerful and accurate, and his shots to the green and his putting were executed with the utmost precision, with the result that he was out in an unbeatable 36 for a four holes lead, and finished it at the 13th. His best holes were the 6th and 7th. He played a masterly drive to the 6th, and got home with the niblick for a 4, and at the 7th he was only inches short from the hole with his chip from 30 yards; Mullan, who looked like winning the hole, taking three putts. Smyth drove the 10th, to which Mullan hooked his tee shot, but, requiring three putts, he got a half. The end came at the 13th.

Davis also was out in 36 against Murphy, and 3 up, and, although bunkered, he won further ahead at the 10th. The 12th was the only hole at which he was over the bogey. Murphy won this hole and the 13th in lovely, but the Newlands man's pulled tee shot to the short 15th closed the door, for Davis left a beautiful shot close to the flag for the match. He had "birdies" at the 2nd, 5th, and 10th, and finished two under fours, a feature was the perfect pitching of both.

The final (36 holes) starts to-day at 2 o'clock and 5.30 o'clock.

SEMI-FINALS.

B. F. Smyth (College of Surgeons) (8) beat S. Mullan (Royal Dublin) (7)—6 and 5.
G. Davis (Castle) (7) beat D. J. Murphy (Newlands) (8)—4 and 3.

AMATEUR BOXING

A programme of six fights was decided at Iveagh Grounds last night in the tournament sponsored by the Soldiers' and L.D.F. Comforts Fund Committee. The light-weight contest provided good boxing. Shape, resisting early pressure by Barrington, gained a decision in the last round, when the referee stopped the fight in his favour. Barrington, having risen gamely after being down for a count of seven, was taking heavy punishment at the time.

Welter—1st—P. Reddy (Clancy) beat R. O'Connor (Portobello), 7st. 7lb. —F. Bermingham (Imperial Tobacco Co.) beat P. McGuire (Terenure).

Fly-weight—J. Power (Avona) beat J. O'Neill (Phœnix).

Kenny Beats Kemp in Tennis Semi-Final

C. A. KEMP, winner of the men's singles for the last two years in the Irish open tennis championships, was defeated yesterday in the semi-final by F. Kenny, who will meet R. F. Egan, the 1940 champion, in this afternoon's final.

Even though Kenny can strike brilliant form at times—he beat Egan in this event last year—Kemp's defeat was quite unexpected, but Kenny's victory was well deserved.

In almost every service game throughout the four sets Kenny established an attacking position, and seldom has an Irish player of recent vintage made better use of this weapon. Off the ground he matched drive for drive with the champion, and he had patches of almost hitting his opponent off the court. Kemp was not as reliable as usual, but he met a player who, on the day, was right on the top of his form.

In the other semi-final Egan, for three of the four sets, was S. Robb's master off the ground, and his incursions to the net were generally successful against an opponent who had no flat drive to use as a passing shot.

The women's final will be a repeat of last year, Miss Lombard, the winner then, against Miss M. Nichols, the 1941 champion. Each showed convincing form to win their semi-finals in straight sets.

In the men's doubles J. Fitzgibbon and I. Boden, who eliminated Kemp and E. H. Maynard in an earlier round, will provide interesting opposition for the holders, Egan and Fannin.

The best match of the day was in the semi-final of the mixed, in which Kemp and Miss Good beat T. G. McVeagh and Mrs. Egan after being 5-1 down in the final set. At that stage Kemp struck a magnificent streak of play, and was well backed up by his partner. The semi-final resulted as under:—

Men's Singles—F. Kenny beat C. A. Kemp—6-1, 6-4, 3-6, 6-1. R. F. Egan beat S. Robb—6-1, 5-7, 6-0, 6-2.

Women's Singles—Miss E. F. Lombard beat Miss D. Curley—6-3, 6-3; Miss M. Nichols beat Miss O. Poole—6-1, 8-6.

Men's Doubles—J. Fitzgibbon and I. Boden beat P. D. MacWeeney and C. H. Maidment—6-2, 1-6, 6-1, 6-2; R. F. Egan and A. E. Fannin beat A. R. and W. D. Gillespie—6-4, 6-1, 6-1.

Cultivation of Garden Lilies

By G. O. SHERRARD.

AT this time of year we find in cottage gardens one of two lilies in flower—either the Madonna (L. candidum) or the Orange (L. croceum). The prevalence of one or the other depends to some extent on the latitude of the district. Both are very handsome, and lead us to enquire whether there are not other lilies which are worthy of extended cultivation. Our climate is, on the whole, extremely well suited to the cultivation of bulbous plants, as may be seen from the success with which we cultivate narcissi and tulips. In the few gardens where lilies have been grown in considerable variety—I can call to mind one in Meath, another in County Wicklow, and a third in County Cork—the results have been so encouraging as to suggest that many lilies are at home in this country. We know that the White Martagon, the Scarlet Turk's Cap and the Tiger Lily have persisted in old gardens with very little attention.

LOAMY SOIL

The majority of lilies prefer a deep loam which does not dry out easily, but is well drained. There are a few lime-hating lilies, which need the same conditions as rhododendrons, but the greater number will tolerate a certain amount of lime in the soil, providing plenty of humus is also present. Some of the better-known lime tolerant kinds are Liliums Candidum, Regale, Chalcedonicum, Testaceum, Henryi, Martagon, Umbellatum and Pardalinum. In the Botanic Gardens at present fine clumps of L. Pardalinum, L. Willmottiae and L. Maxwill can be seen in the rhododendron beds.

Unless the soil is naturally peaty it is well worth while adding some turf mould to the planting stations for all lilies, as it encourages good root action. There are differences of opinion among growers as to the feeding of lilies; some recommend very well decayed manure, but not in contact with the bulb, either well below it or on top of the soil as mulch, while others rely chiefly on leaf-mould, as in nature they are often found in woodland or in scrub, but some such as L. Henryi, L. Tigrinum and L. Testaceum seem to thrive on a stronger diet, and we find them doing well in the herbaceous border, which is annually mulched. Personally, I mix some old hot-bed manure with the soil as well as peat and leaf-mould when planting lilies, and top-dress them with the same mixture in spring. Wood ashes is said to have an excellent effect on their growth; it is mixed with the top dressing in spring.

PLANTING

The correct depth of planting for each species is important in cultivation, as some make roots on the stem above the bulb, so that the bulbs must be planted deeper than those which have not this habit. L. Tigrinum and L. Umbellatum, for instance, are stem rooting, and should be planted a couple of inches deeper than L. Candidum and L. Croceum, and should only be covered with two or three inches of soil. The best month for planting is October; about the only exception to this rule is the Madonna Lily (L. Candidum), which is best planted in August. It is said that lilies like their roots in the shade and their tops in the sun, for which reason they are often planted among dwarf shrubs and ferns. The herbaceous border, however, fulfils this condition fairly well, and several varieties thrive in it besides those I have already mentioned, notably Liliums Umbellatum, Regale, Croceum, Chalcedonicum, Maxwill, Princeps, and Martagon Album. In addition to the ordinary method of increase by the formation of new bulbs, lilies can be easily grown from seed, which is sown, as soon as ripe, in pots or deep boxes, or even in beds in the open ground.

BULBLETS

Some lilies will flower in two years from seed, notably the handsome L. Regale. Certain lilies form bulblets in the axil of the leaves. These bulblets form a ready means of increase, and will produce flowers often two years after removal. A third method of increase is by detaching the individual scales from the bulb and putting them into boxes of peaty compost in a greenhouse, and keeping them just moist in a temperature of about 55°.

Three Dublin Postmen Sentenced

Sentencing three postmen to terms of imprisonment for stealing postal orders and packets in course of transmission, Judge Shannon, in the Dublin Circuit Criminal Court yesterday, said the cases were very alarming. Postal officials who tampered with the property of citizens and stole from letters could expect nothing but imprisonment.

Thomas O'Neill (28), married, with 14 years' service, of 9 Little Mary street, received a nine months' sentence for having stolen a packet containing two 10/- notes and another containing three £1 notes.

Richard Ryan (27), married, Kincora Park, Clontarf, was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment for having stolen a test packet containing two currency notes of much and 2/- in coins and 14 other postal packets.

George Howard, a temporary postman, Colowell street, Glasthule, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for having stolen eight packets containing £6 4/- and for having stolen 47 packets.

James Vincent Dodd (19), Richmond row, Portobello, was put back for sentence, the judge advising him to see the probation officer. He pleaded guilty to having stolen six packets.

Judge's Contempt for Receivers

Sentencing Maurice Coleman (41), Upper Abbey street, to four months' imprisonment for having received 86 chairs, 36 examination desks, and six carpets the property of the Commissioners of Public Works, knowing them to have been stolen, Judge Shannon, in Dublin Circuit Criminal Court yesterday, said he had no sympathy with thieves and receivers, and did his best to prevent the existence of receivers by passing stiff sentences.

Coleman, a native of Russia, was stated to have bought the furniture for £23 from a storeman now serving a sentence in Mountjoy Prison, and to have realised £45 on the sale of part of it.

Further Remand in Bray Murder Charge

At Bray yesterday, before District Justice Price, Patrick Nolan (17), labourer, The Gap, Ballycourcey, Ennischorthy, was again remanded in custody on the charge of having murdered Miss Kathleen Byrne (34), on June 20 last, at Coolawinna, Ashford, where she was employed as a housekeeper by Mr. John Nolan. John Nolan also worked on the farm.

Mr. A. B. Cullen, State Solicitor, Wicklow, said he was not producing any further evidence.

Supt. G. A. Flynn said he wanted the remand for the purpose of having his inquiries completed.

Fire Fighting in Co. Cavan—The Meath County Manager has approved of an application from Cavan County Council for the services of the Army Fire Brigade for fire calls to the town of Bailieborough, Ballyjamesduff, Virginia and Mountnugent, pending delivery of necessary fire fighting equipment.

Death After Collision

While being carried on a bicycle on Sunday night, April 26, last year, John Gorman, Killaderreen, Newtownmountkennedy, County Wicklow, was knocked down by a motor car driven by Matthew Smith, licensed trader, Stepaside, Sandyford, Dublin, near Kilpedder, and died the next day. His father's action for damages against Mr. Smith was settled for £451 and costs, Mr. Sean MacBride (instructed by Messrs. J. H. McCarroll and Co.), for Mr. Thomas Gorman, the father, told Mr. Justice Overend in the High Court, Dublin, yesterday.

Messrs. Milward Jones, Mayne and Sharpe were solicitors for Mr. Smith.

FILMS IN THE SCHOOL

It was a matter of the utmost importance that the film should be fitted into the syllabus, and not determine the syllabus, said Miss Elizabeth McGiniey, lecturing on "The Classroom Use of Educational Films" to the teachers' group of the Irish Film Society at 5 North East street, Dublin, last night.

The film, said Miss McGinley, had helped greatly in increasing the vocabulary of backward children, but it could never take the place of the teacher.

IVEAGH GARDENS FETE

Happy warriors make the best soldiers, said Mr. Oscar Traynor (Minister for Defence) in an appeal he made for support for the Soldiers' and L.D.F. Comforts Fund, when declaring open a fête in aid of these funds at Iveagh Gardens, Dublin, yesterday afternoon. The Minister was met on arrival by a guard of honour from the 42nd Battalion, L.D.F. He said: "People are filled with pride at seeing their young men march past on ceremonial and other occasions, but few realised the amount of training required to enable these parades to be carried out with such efficiency and precision." He felt it was hardly necessary to appeal to the generosity of the citizens of Dublin to come forward in their thousands and support this worthy cause. Those who were unable to attend the fête could send in subscriptions.

The Minister was received by Mrs. Sean Lemass (president of the fund), others present including Mrs. Oscar Traynor, Mrs. W. F. Hooper, Mrs. M. O'Connor, Mrs. P. Colgan, Mrs. R. Mulcahy, Mrs. S. O'Donovan, Mrs. A. Ere, Hunt, Lieutenant-Colonel Liam Archer (Assistant Chief of Staff), Colonel L. Hoolan
